

Bismarck's Expose of the Secret Treaty.

Heavy Skirmishing and Results.

BISMARCK'S CIRCULAR.
BERLIN, July 31.—The Anzeiger publishes a circular addressed by Count Bismarck on the 29th instant to the representatives of Prussia at the courts of neutral powers. The document gives the following expose of the negotiations between France and Prussia.

Before the Danish war, says Count Bismarck, the French legation at Berlin urged an alliance between France and Prussia for the purpose of mutual aggrandizement. France, anticipating war with Austria as a consequence of the Danish war, made overtures relative to the restoration of the Luxembourg frontier of 1814, the acquisition of Saarburg and Landon, while the broader settlement of the boundary question, on the basis of language, was not to be excluded. These instances in May, 1866, took the form of a proposition for an alliance, offensive and defensive, the manuscript original of which is in the foreign office here. These propositions are as follows:

First. Should a congress of the powers assemble, Italy to have Venetia and Prussia the Dutchies.

Second. Should congress disagree, an alliance offensive and defensive to be made between France and Prussia.

Third. Prussia to open hostilities against Austria within ten days after the dissolution of the congress.

Fourth. Should no congress meet, Prussia to attack Austria within thirty days after the signature of the present treaty.

Fifth. Napoleon to begin hostilities against Austria as soon as Prussia, despatching 300,000 men during the first month across the Rhine.

Sixth. No separate treaty shall be made by either of the powers with Austria, when the joint treaty is made.

The following are the conditions:

First. Venetia to go to Italy.

Second. Prussia to select German territory at will for annexation, the number of inhabitants not to exceed 8,000,000 souls. The territory thus acquired to become part of the kingdom of Prussia, without federal rights.

Third. France to have a liberal share of the Rhine provinces.

Fourth. A military and maritime alliance to be made between France, by which Italy may be a party should she so desire. This programme, the circular states, was rejected in June, 1866, in spite of the threatening urgency of France.

Proposals were incessantly renewed, with modifications, sacrificing Belgium and South Germany, but were never seriously entertained by Prussia. For the sake of peace, however, it was thought best to leave Napoleon to his delusions. No word implying approval was returned. Time was counted on to revolutionize France and extinguish the scheme. Hence the long delay and silence.

The attempt against Luxembourg failing, France repeated her former propositions, making the specifications clear in regard to the acquisition of Belgium by France, and South Germany by Prussia. These last propositions were formulated by Count Benedetti himself, and it is most probable that he wrote them without the authority of the Emperor, as they are the same which were made four years ago, under the threat of war as the alternative of their refusal. Any one acquainted with these antecedents must have known that had Prussia acquiesced in the seizure of Belgium, France would have found another Belgium in Prussian territory.

Once rejected by Prussia, there is no probability that its terms will ever be accepted hereafter. Should France gain decisive victories over Prussia, and Belgium not observe a strict neutrality, it may be her fate to be absorbed by France! and should Prussia master her great antagonist, she, too, may take Belgium upon some pretext or other. The ultimate destiny of Belgium would seem to be to be devoured by one or the other of the ambitious military powers on either side of her. It matters little to Europe or to the world who gobbles her up—and least of all does it matter to England, whose true policy, as her wisest statesmen affirm, is to keep clear of all European questions.

PARTICULARS OF THE SKIRMISH.
The heaviest skirmish that has taken place in this district (Saarbrücken) was reported this morning. A party of French infantry had crossed into Prussian territory, about half way between this and Saar-Louis. Forty men of the garrison at Saar-Louis and some infantry went out to meet them, and were coming up with them between the villages of Ludweiler and Geisalanter, about six miles west of this place, when a squadron of French cavalry suddenly appeared. The Prussians fired away as hard as they could at the cavalry with needle guns, and disposed of them before the infantry could come up.

Then an infantry fight followed, which ended in the French throwing off their kits, and running away, leaving one officer and eight men dead on the field. Three Prussians were severely wounded. According to report, no less than three French companies of infantry were engaged.

The enormous price to be paid to Nilsson for her notes reminds us that art and literature are better paid in the present day than ever they have been. The ancient practice was largesse from the rich and powerful. Then artists starved. The modern idea is wages for labor, and now artists flourish. Milton got $50 for "Paradise Lost." Disraeli got $75,000 for "Lothair." Michael Angelo, Titian and a few others were the companions of Kings, but the mass of the painters starved for the want of patronage. A modern painter of very good merit can at least earn his bread, while the great men, like Church and Bierstadt, live like princes. The world moves.

PLASTER FOR THE CRETELO.—A correspondent of the Western Rural saved his plums from the curculio for three years by the use of plaster. His process consists of dusting the trees with plaster while the leaves and fruit are wet with dew. The plum should be entirely coated with plaster from the time they begin to set until they have outgrown danger from the curculio. Use about two quarts of very fine plaster on each tree, dusting it on under the fruit as well as from both sides. When the plaster is washed off by rain it should be renewed, as the curculio is very persevering and searches for a suitable place to deposit its eggs.

The Pull Mall Gazette estimates that the Prussian army on the frontier now numbers 500,000 men.

NEWS FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.

German Enthusiasm Unabated.

LONDON, August 2.—Yesterday's dispatches from Saarbrücken report no important operations along the entire line. A large body of French are moving on Forbach.

The war news this morning is meagre and unimportant.

The London journals appear this morning without a word from the rival armies on the Rhine.

The impression prevails that the arrival of the French fleet in the Baltic alone prevented a Prussian advance through France to Paris.

Advices from Prussian sources mention the prevalence throughout Germany of unwavering assurance of ultimate victory.

Advices from Prussian sources say that many encounters with scouting parties occur along the Rhine.

Serious apprehensions of a famine on the Rhine are felt.

The Opinion National, of Paris, says in this connection that, to avoid impoverishing the scene of war, Napoleon draws his subsistence from distant points by rail.

The Times this morning has a long editorial on the prospect. The writer thinks the delay in military movements on both sides is to be ascribed to the demoralization of troops from having been moved by rail.

The French are also delayed on account of the hesitation of the South German States, and are now necessarily confined to the narrow ground of the Saar valley. In fact, the entire preconceived plans of the Emperor have been altered by unforeseen circumstances of this sort, and has acted, probably, to form new ones.

The Times argues that the arm of the French, the chasseur, on account of its fouling speedily, will be found to be infinitely less efficient than the needle gun, and the difference in this respect will probably be sufficient to govern the result of the war.

Active recruiting for the marine service has been ordered at the English dockyards.

In the House of Commons, replying to questions, Mr. Gladstone said the policy of the English Government was not one of armed neutrality, but of friendship to both contestants. He declared that the obligations of the Vienna treaty ended with the German empire. The Government was doing everything to enforce the observance of neutrality, but British power was restricted to British waters. All legal restraints had been imposed on the sale of coal.

The Democrats and the War.
Are the Democratic leaders determined that the Republicans shall carry the next House of Representatives? If not, why are they doing their best to drive the entire German vote away from the Democratic party? The Irish undoubtedly sympathize with France to the pending European war. But let the Democratic party pursue such a course as it may please on any subject whatever, and it will not alienate from it 10,000 Irishmen in the entire country who would otherwise vote for its ticket.

The Germans are swayed by the strongest of impulses in this war—love for their fatherland. They detest France, and have no friendship for those politicians in the United States who incline to the Bonaparte side of the conflict. The drift of the Democratic press, and especially in this section of the Union, is against Prussia. If the Democracy succeed in repelling the great body of the German voters from them, it will certainly carry Connecticut and New Jersey over to the Republicans, put to hazard Democratic ascendancy in New York, and leave that party a meagre following in all the Central and Western States.

By stumbling over the Africans the Democrats lost the House of Representatives in the last five Congresses. Do they intend to lose the next House by stumbling over the Germans? We presume the Republicans will not object, but will rather say to their antagonists, "Make your game, gentlemen!"—New York Sun.

Prussian Defenses.
The Confederation of North Germany possesses nine strongholds of the first class. They are: On the Rhine, Mayence, Coblenz, Cologne; on the Elbe, Koenigsberg, Magdeburg; on the Oder, Stettin; on the Vistula, Posen; near the mouth of the Vistula, Dantzig; on the Pregel, Koenigsberg.

All these places are on Prussian ground, except Mayence (Hesse) and Koenigsberg (Saxony).

There are fourteen strongholds of the second class: On the river Saar, Saar-Louis; on the Rhine, Wesel; on the Weser, Minden; on the Gera, Erfurt; on the Elbe, Forgan; on the Spree, Spandau; on the Oder, Glogau; on the Neisse, Glatz, Neisse; on the Baltic, Sonderburg-Dupel, Keil-Friedrichsdorf, Stralsund, Colberg.

The strongholds of the third class are: On the Elbe, Wittenberg; on the Oder, Kosel, Kustrin; on the Vistula, Grandenz; on the Baltic, Swinemunde, Pillau.

Besides these, there are the following fortified posts: The earthworks about Dresden, the bridge at Marienburg, the bridge at Dirschau, the mouth of the Weser and the port of Memel.

The Sympathies of Americans.
The peculiar feature of this is that the whole Democratic English press of America take firm ground in favor of France, while, on the other hand, the Republican press give the most enthusiastic sympathy for Germany. These facts show the respective feelings of these two political parties of America towards the Germans, and doubtless has had the effect of opening the eyes of the German Democrats, who have hitherto been blind in regard to the true feelings of their party towards them.—Memphis Der Anzeiger des Sudens.

A woman was seen rushing through the street, during the great fire at Constantinople, and dashing into a friend's house at a distance from the flames, hugging something in her arms. "Safe! Safe!" she exclaimed. "Thank God, I've saved my child! My plate is down in the well, and that can be got at when the fire is over."

A piercing shriek immediately followed, for looking down, she found that what she held in her arms was only her plate, tied up in a handkerchief, and that in her bewilderment and hurry, what she had thrown into the well was her own infant.

England has determined to make the invasion of Belgium a casus belli.
